

Rods in the Pocket 2013

Everybody loves hot rods, muscle cars, and charities for kids. The 3rd Annual King Neptune Rods in the Pocket car show blends all of these together in one fun event for everybody.

It's been awhile since my last post. I've even, unfortunately, missed a couple of Wagon Wednesday's in there. On a bit of a sad note, my car was smashed in an accident back on October 20th, 2013, and I've been going to physical therapy since then. It's a long story, but that's depressing and probably not why you opened the article.

When not writing posts for Auto Waffle, or articles for Region Rides Magazine (shameless plug - go like their Facebook page and check out some more cool customs, bikes, and shops in the Hoosier state), I masquerade as a marketing coordinator for a local collector car dealership here in my home town of Stuart, Florida. We have an eclectic mix of inventory. Everything from bone stock unrestored classics, to bikes, and all the way up to wild and crazy modern day street-legal race cars. Basically, if it's cool, we'll buy or sell it. If you're looking for something specific, we'll find it and connect you to the vehicle of your dreams.

How is this relevant, you ask? Simple. What better way to put the word out about some cool custom cars and trucks for sale than to take them to a cool custom hot rod show? Couple that with the fact that the Rods in the Pocket car show benefits a charity that sends gifts to local kids, and not only is it a good time - it's good PR. So yes, I'm "at work" and at a car show at the same time. You're jealous. I'm sorry.

Without further ado, because I know you're all probably tired of listening to me blab, Here's a killer photo gallery of just some of the things I saw at the Rods in the Pocket car show this year. There was something for everyone. Pickup trucks with patina, an unmolested original 1963 split-window Corvette with factory AC, a Chevy/Geo Tracker with a V8 shoehorned under the hood, wagons, Novas, Tri-Fives, a brand new Camaro ZL-1 and more. Take a look at the photos and tell me what your favorite is down in the comments!
